Current Events Interpreted

POLITICAL FIREWORKS

Political fireworks, which will be flaring up with increasing frequency from now on in to the big election day almost a year hence. flashed into momentary brilliance again last week to dominate the national scene. And the spark setting off the display was the usual one—a speech by the President of the United States. Also as usual, a sharp division of opinion as to the meaning and purpose of Roosevelt's Atlanta talk was apparent in the reaction of the populace, the dividing line being the one stretched tautly between the two great parties of this land—Democratic and Republican. Presidential supporters cheered lustily, while his critics again lashed out severely at what he said. Many interpreted the speech, which was sort of an accounting of New Deal activity up to now, as a major outline of the attack the Democrats will adhere to in the coming campaign. Money, the budget, and government spending was the President's chief topic, and what he said about these things was interesting, whatever your reaction to them might be.

EXERCISE IN BILLIONS

First came one significant assurance, heralded in headlines throughout the nation. The President said that the huge government debt, at its all-time high of twenty-nine and a half billions, had reached its peak and was on the way down. He added that this was possible because the need for expenditures, now that recovery is well along, has decreased, and that revenues are rising rapidly along with it. Then Roosevelt spoke the words that may turn out to be the New Deal's reply to the barrage of Republican criticism of huge spending. In 1933, he said, he had asked numerous bankers assembled in Washington what they thought to be the peak load of debt this country could carry, and that they had placed this figure at between $55,000,000,000 and $70,000,000,000. His point was that then these men, anxious for federal support for their shaky banks and businesses, were entirely willing to see the debt approach these figures, but that now they are upbraiding him for appropriating much more conservatively. Those, observers agreed, were the words that made politics of it.

SOME STILL ON THE FENCE

Unquestionably, this line of reasoning was aimed to counteract the wave of opposition criticism on monetary policies of the New Deal. But from the opposition camp immediately after the Atlanta speech came a sharp rejoinder fashioned by none other than the Republican national chairman, Henry P. Fletcher. He described the talk as "an obvious build-up for a future fake balancing of the budget by New Deal sleight of hand." And the political complexion of the proceedings was apparent in subsequent words of Chairman Fletcher's rebuttal when he said that "as a candidate Mr. Roosevelt is for economy, as a President he is a spender." And as the nation buzzed with the controversy, that all-important group still not definitely "sold" for or against the New Deal tried to digest these two points of view and gain some weight for one or the other side of the scales. Unquestionably in America today there are more people definitely, rabidly, for one side or the other than ever before. But also there is the "on the fence" contingent, and the direction this body of votes begins to slide, or even to stampede, will decide the issue in 1936.

BEST CHRISTMAS SINCE 1929

Politics will always be with us, but Christmas comes only once a year, and always before its arrival people keep close watch on the buying in progress. It is one of the best signs of the times. And this year, if preliminary figures are any indication, the times are better than in any year since 1929. Estimates of Christmas spending range from $4,500,000,000 upward, with gifts of the "luxury" variety for the first time in six years. Diamonds, sable coats, luxury motor cars and even some inquiries for yachts have been reported. Toy sales are mounting. The total expenditure this year likely will be around 210 million dollars, representing an increase of 10 million dollars over last year. Also there is evidence of large Christmas demand for household furnishings. Since home building has boomed, many home owners are all set to stock up on house decorations. Even to antique furniture dealers this wave of buying has reached, a number of them already having reported a heartening pickup. Jewelry sales continue to mount, and Christmas cards—which in 1932 dropped down to the two for five level for most people—are moving into the better grades of embossed, crested and engraved which cost as much as 35 cents to $1.50 each. Candy sales, florists sales, and the other nicknacks of Christmas all will swell the total to make this one of the best spending Christmases in six years, with total dollar turnover some 10 to 50 per cent better than last year.

Convention of State Grange Goes On Record to Curb Chain Store Expansion

The following resolution was passed by the state grange when their convention of over four thousand farmers assembled at Sacramento in November, the delegate body casting a unanimous vote.

"Whereas, massed buying as practiced by chain stores is a menace to the farmer and tends to produce a private monopoly in the distribution of food;

"Whereas private monopoly in the distribution of food is a threat to the welfare of all people, and

"Whereas chain stores do not now pay their fair share of the tax load and at the same time take the net profit from business out of local communities and send it back to Wall street controlled financial centers in the east, destroying at the same time opportunities for our own boys and girls coming out of high schools and universities,

"Now, therefore, be it resolved that the California State grange endorses and supports legislation to curb expansion and to regulate existing chain stores in California."

This and similar resolutions passed by various farm and business groups throughout the country are no doubt due to the facts brought out in the Patman congressional investigation now being conducted concerning the political influences and buying methods being used by the large national chains.

Roger Bales Tells P.T.A. of Scouting

The Campbell Union Grammar School Parent-Teachers association held its regular monthly meeting on Dec. 3, with the president, Mrs. Harry B. Mitchell, presiding.

Mrs. Ray Wood, secretary, read a very interesting letter from Mrs. Ralph E. Sanders, junior past president of the sixth district, urging all members to aid in the sale of Christmas seals for the tuberculosis fund. The letter outlined briefly the work accomplished by the tuberculosis association in our own county.

The unit voted to rent a motion picture for the children for their Christmas entertainment.

Roger Bales, field executive of the Boy Scouts, then addressed the members on the subject of the Cub pack, which the P. T. A. is sponsoring this year. Mr. Bales discussed the origination of the scout movement in 1879 by Baden Powell and its subsequent development into its present state. The cubs are an outgrowth of the scouts, conceived to occupy the leisure hours of the younger boys—those ranging from nine to 12 years.

The Rev. J. H. Bennett, pastor of the Congregational church, is the executive officer and master, and will be assisted by the interested mothers and fathers of the group. John Paviso and F. Crowley will also assist in this splendid work.

Reverend Bennett spoke a few words to the members and informed them that on Saturday, Dec. 7, the first Cub charter would be presented to Mrs. Harry B. Mitchell at the Scout meeting in the Sainte Claire hotel. Sunday night at 7:45 Mrs. Mitchell will turn the charter over to Fred E. Jones, at a Cub meeting in the Congregational church here.

After the meeting refreshments were served in the cafeteria by P. T. A. members.

GIVES CLUB "LOW-DOWN" ON S. J. PORT

A very interesting and instructive story of the San Jose port program and the advantages to be gained by it were told Campbell Kiwanians Tuesday by Al Meyer, one of the port commissioners.

The one answer to all objections to the proposed port is the assured terminal rates for all cargo received at or shipped from San Jose, according to Commissioner Meyer.

The terminal rates makes competitive industry surer of its position on bid prices. This security makes for more manufacturing and more employment and consequently more population and business for the community.

Inestimable benefits are to be gained by many sections outside as well as within the port district.

The Campbell club will hold a closed meeting strictly for business next Tuesday evening at 6:30.

"Travels" Topic at Monday's Meeting of Country Womans Club

"Travels" proved to be a most interesting subject when developed Monday by Mrs. M. E. Purmort and Mrs. Rose Hanger of the Country Woman's club for the entertainment of their fellow members.

Mrs. Purmort related some of the high-lights of the 7600 mile trip which she and Mr. Purmort enjoyed this summer and fall. Among the many beautiful and historical places visited she mentioned old Fort Ross, Coulee dam, Victoria, Glacier and Yellowstone National parks, and the Indian villages of the Apache, Navajo and Taos tribes.

Mrs. Hanger had visited England, going by way of the Panama canal from San Francisco to New York, thence to Southampton, England.

Amusing and unusual events of the two voyages, and snapshot views of canal zone cities, of Havanna and New York were vividly pictured.

The relatives whom she was visiting live in the southern and eastern counties of England and it was in those lovely old cities and villages, and in the rural sections that most of her time was spent. A day at Eton college was one of the delightful events, and visits to lovely old Peterborough cathedral and other ancient churches were made very vivid to her listeners.

Mrs. Freeman Howes sang two lovely songs very appropriate to the season and the topic of the day, "Pilgrim Fathers" and "Gypsy Trail." Mrs. Louis Widmann was her accompanist, and she also played for the community singing of the concluding number, "I Love You California," led by Mrs. Howes.

Mrs. H. C. Smith read a humorous description of a travel trip, "An Eight Hour Law for Vacations," written by "Uncle Henry" (George Creel) of Los Gatos.

Mrs. Hanger was chairman of the day's committee, assisted by Mrs. Dan W. Clark, who acted as hostess, and Mrs. H. C. Smith. Mrs. Elizabeth Duncan, who was here last week, had returned to Shandon and was unable to serve.

The many lovely winter berries in the various shades of orange and red, catoneasters, toyon, and pepper, with the contrasting snow berries, were used profusely in the decorations. A bowl of chrysanthemums graced the president's table, and one of lavender sage, the piano.

A roll call was held during the business meeting for the collection of the membership quota of the student loan fund. Members not participating at this meeting will be given an opportunity on Dec. 16.

An effort which is being made to secure more of the better music on station KQW was endorsed by the club.

Mrs. Purmort, who is chairman of the next meeting, announced that Mrs. Herbert Jones will give an illustrated talk on the "Madonna In Art." Students of the music class of the high school under the direction of C. P. Klassen will sing. The gifts of jam and jelly for the grammar school "underweights" will be made at that time.

(Mabel) Doran, Mrs. E. A. (Hazel) Peard, J. W. and David Oliver. Three granddaughters of the couple, Mabel Harriett and Jane Rubell, and Kathryn Doran were assisted in the serving of refreshments by a group of school friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver were made very happy by the dozens of cards, flowers and gifts received from their many friends. To make them especially happy were a number of Campbell friends and friends formerly of Illinois, who called during the afternoon. Among the Campbell folks who called were Mr. and Mrs. Mark Purmort and Mrs. Hart, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Young, Mr. and Mrs. B. O. Curry and Miss Myrtle Curry, Mr. and Mrs. Walker Vaughn, Fred Evans and Joe White. Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Influence Immortal

The men who are gone seem to have left behind them in the world much of their power of vitality; and I suppose hardly a day passes in which we do not do some act, small or great, under this power of inspiration of our predecessors, something we should not have done, or should have done differently, if, even with all the machinery of living and all the truths we know now, we had had no predecessors, had been the first tenants if our earth.—Phillips Brooks.

Fishing Fleet Conducts Funeral for Ghost Ship

The Flying Dutchman, encountered usually in the neighborhood of Cape Horn, and prophesying disaster at that most dreaded ocean corner, is the most famous of ghost ships, but now we hear that another sinister vessel has taken to appearing and disappearing in the South seas. It takes the form of a phantom launch, which haunts the fishing grounds near Chatham islands, a lonely outpost 400 miles southeast of New Zealand.

Four years ago the craft was first reported, and soon afterwards a launch in which 11 fishermen were going to a football match foundered, all being drowned. More recently a lonely fisherman claimed to have seen it; a few days later he was swept overboard to oblivion by a heavy sea. Perhaps with the idea of exorcising this grim visitant, the whole fishing fleet assembled on the approximate spot, and held a solemn funeral service. The ghostly launch is said to appear in misty weather and to travel at supernatural speed.

SYNOPSIS

Perilla Fairfax and Corey Malden are to be married the next day at Lovell Terrace, Long Island home of John Lovell, her stepfather. Gathered are Tony Gaskell, best man, a lawyer; Hilda Sheldon, maid of honor; and Pete Wilson and Bob Coles, friends of Perilla's brother, ushers. Corey is very wealthy. He is thirty-eight and Perilla twenty-four, but it is a true love match. Everybody is busy, including Jane Latimer, Mrs. Lovell's pretty and efficient social secretary. There is a dress rehearsal and Malcolm and Bob are sent to get the Tenney girls. When the party is breaking up the night before the wedding, Malcolm complains of a headache. Tony produces some white tablets and nearly every one takes one, including Corey. After the wedding Perilla tells her mother that Bob had repeated his threat that if she ever married anyone except him, he would kill her, the bridegroom, or himself. Her mother insists Bob was only teasing her. In a Baltimore hotel room Corey tells Perilla, "you won't like my mother. She isn't lovable," then drops to the floor dead as he holds her in his arms. Alone, except for Boynton, the chauffeur, and Sarah, her maid, Perilla has Boynton telephone her father to come by plane with Malcolm. A physician says the death resulted from natural causes. When Perilla arrives at the Malden home she is greeted by Madame Malden with, "you murdered him." That night she enters Perilla's room by a balcony window.

"I promise," said the old woman, sullenly.

"I am not at all sure you will keep your promise. A Malden would never break a given word, but you are not a Malden. You are not to be trusted in anything, therefore, tomorrow I put the whole business before your lawyer. Everything, mind."

"No, no," came the screeching again, and as Perilla jumped out of bed and held her captive, she called to Sarah to fetch the nurse.

"Find her somehow," she said, "if you have to rouse the whole household."

Sarah soon found her, sleeping soundly, and carried her off to Perilla.

"One moment, Miss Seymour," she said. "Is Madame Malden subject to fancies? To imaginations?"

"At times, yes," the nurse replied.

"Take her away, please, and ask her not to have them any more."

Perilla had just been wakened next morning when Malcolm arrived from the railroad station and she hurried downstairs to greet him.

"Wait a minute, Pril," he said, as he led her to a settee in the corner of the porch. "Listen here. Don't say a single word to anybody, which can be quoted as yours. I mean, confine everything you say to casual subjects, like the weather, the beauty of the place, the house, or the city of Richmond. But not a word of Corey, or any of us, of yourself, of anything personal. I can't say more now, but, remember."

John Lovell joined them, they had a family breakfast, and then Perilla dismissed the servants.

"Did you learn anything in Washington?" she asked her brother.

"No," he returned, "except that we want to keep perfectly quiet, and get away from here and back to New York as soon as we can."

"Tell it all, Mal," said Lovell, "we must know. You can speak low. I doubt anybody is listening."

"Well, then," and Malcolm spoke in a low whisper, "there are hints, or at least, vague murmurs about Pril being alone with Corey in the room—you know. I think, so far, there is no harm done, but it is like a smoldering flame, a breath would set it off. I saw your two friends, Perilla, meaning Carleton and Carmichael, and they agree it will all fade away, if there is nothing more said or done. They tell me to beware of Farman, the little lawyer person down here. But Garth will be here by noon, so he'll handle that issue. You know him, Perilla?"

"Yes, he's a delightful man, and one of Corey's best friends."

"I'm afraid it's going to be difficult to decide what or who a best friend is. And here's another thing. Leave the old 'un to me. I've a notion I can fix her."

Perilla had just summoned the servants when Dillon came with a message for Malcolm. It was a command to visit the sitting room of his hostess at once.

Malcolm was not especially pleased at the tone of the message, but he went with Dillon at once, and was received by Madame Malden in her most pompous and antagonistic mood.

CHAPTER IV

"HOW do you do, Mrs. Malden?" Malcolm said, cheerfully, grasping Madame Malden's hand with a hearty shake, before she could stop him. "I am Malcolm Fairfax, and I'm glad of an opportunity to talk to you. I think I can be of real help to you."

Corey's mother, who had become more and more amazed at this astonishing young man, began to look a little frightened.

"All right, all right, lady, don't feel the slightest alarm. But we must be alone, it is imperative. Dillon, you may go, and Miss Seymour, too, please." He gave the nurse one of his best smiles.

The two faded from view, and Malcolm drew his chair nearer to the old lady, who was now fuming with anger.

"There, there," Malcolm said, soothingly, "I told you I want to help you. Why get mad at that?"

"You are the madman!" she exploded, "what do you mean by addressing me in this manner?"

"Can't you even understand the meaning of words? My, my! What a pity! Now, I'm a good sort, and truly I can help you. I have lots of influence. Listen here, now; where do you want to go? Just you tell me, and I'll see that you get there."

"Get where? I don't want to go anywhere."

"That's too bad, but you'll have to, you know—after—you know—after what you said."

"What did I say? I didn't say anything that I shouldn't—"

"Oh, piffle! Don't take it that way. That won't help you any. Too many witnesses. Drop it. Now, here's where I come in. You must have a choice of places, and I can tell you that to be able to get your choice is a great thing—yes, sir, a very great thing."

"Choice of what?"

"Of places—places to go. I don't know the nicest ones down here; I know the New York ones, but I suppose you'd rather stay near home. So, out with it! Is there a good one nearby?"

"A good what?"

"H—l, but you're dense. Look here, you're sane now, aren't you?"

"I certainly am."

"Well, lots of times you're not, and they've put up with it just as long as they can, but when you said that—you know—you spilled the beans. Now, you've got to go—"

"Go where?"

"Good land, you're stupid! To an institution, an asylum for the insane, if you want it in plain English. Now, don't begin to scream—that won't get you anywhere."

Madame's hand was clapped over her mouth; she looked like one hypnotized.

"You see, it was the last straw when you said—"

"What did I say?"

"Poor lady! Don't you even remember? Well, it often goes that way. You said," again Malcolm's deep whisper had a tone as of utter condemnation, "you said—that Perilla murdered Corey! Corey, her beloved, her other self. You never saw them together—I have. They were born for each other—but, pshaw, all this you know, and then you hint, you say outright, that Perilla killed Corey. A long time they have suspected you of being mad, now they know it, you proved it on yourself. So, as I say, you must go—go—"

"Not to a madhouse—no, NO!"

"Don't shriek. Be quiet. Not to a madhouse now, perhaps, but to an asylum—and then, you'll go on, you know. You can't stop, you've gone too far. You see, an accusation of murder is a pretty serious matter.

"You know all this is true. You know there are great and powerful ones in Washington—who are none too fond of you. Who loved Corey, but who would not raise a finger to save a jealous maniac from the madhouse where she already belongs. You know Perilla adored her husband, and that your accusation is rubbish. Yet you would willingly drag the old and honored name of Malden through the mud and mire of a silly murder trial, which could have but one result—Perilla's triumphant acquittal and your own infamy and degradation.

"John Lovell is not the man to take quietly an insult to his daughter, and I am not sure he has not already started on the matter of your mental responsibility. Now, you must see for yourself—if this is one of your rational days—that I am saying all this to you for your own sake as well as my sister's. I don't pretend to an entirely disinterested friendship for you, but I do stand ready to befriend you if you play fair with Perilla.

"Listen to this; it is short; you can learn it:

"Of what did Corey die, according to the doctor's certificate?

"Of heart failure.

"What caused this heart failure? An unsuspected weakness of the heart. That was made out and signed by one of the most famous physicians in Washington, and do you dare presume to pit your feeble knowledge of physiology against his? Do you dare say he is wrong and you are right? Especially, as when you said that fearful thing, you didn't know what you were saying?"

"No, sir—no, Mr. Fairfax," came a trembling voice. "What can I do to set matters right?"

"I fear it is too late for that. As I told you, those words of yours sealed your doom. I only came to offer my help in seeing to it that you got to the institution you preferred."

"Oh, Mr. Malcolm, don't let me go! You have influence, you are kind-hearted, save me—save me, for Corey's sake, save me!"

"You should have thought of this before you denounced your daughter-in-law. But your lawyer, Mr. Farman, is coming soon. Perhaps he can find a way out."

"No, he can't—he is a nitwit. Oh, you help me! You are a fine young man, and Farman is a back number."

"But he knows you said that about Perilla, and he knows how serious it is."

"I'll tell him I didn't mean it. I'll be lovely to Perilla, and it won't be pretense. I do love her, I took to her at once. And if she will only forgive my—"

"Look here, Mrs. Malden, you'll have to have that out with Perilla. She is not easy to hoodwink, and you'll have to convince her of your sincerity. But if you can do that, the rest will follow. Otherwise, I'm pretty sure you're on the road to somewhere."

"And will you send Perilla to me?"

"I prefer to be here also. May I ring the bell?"

"Do. That brass one. You insist on staying with us?"

"I fear I must. But don't let me embarrass you. It will be better for you to have me here."

Perilla was soon found and brought to the sitting-room.

"Sit down," was the gruff invitation. "I want to make up with you."

At a meaning glance from Malcolm Perilla said pleasantly, "Oh, there's nothing to make up. You didn't want to see me, but now you have seen me again, I'm not so bad, am I?"

"You're lovely! I don't wonder Corey adored you."

Perilla nearly fell off her chair in surprise. What miracle had Malcolm brought about?

"Yes, he did adore me. We planned to be so happy—"

"Yes, dear—yes, yes. Now today I want you to remember that I am your friend, will you? The lawyers will be here, and I want you to see them, if possible, in my place. I can't understand their talk and their arguments as I used to, and you must help me out—both of you."

She smiled at Malcolm, who grinned back at her, and they both said they would do all they could to help.

Perilla said afterward that she was scared to death that Madame Malden would kiss her, but the nurse came then and took the old lady away.

"Did you hypnotize her?" whispered Perilla to her brother.

"Maybe. Keep quiet, now. The game's never out till it's played out. Watch your step, Pril, especially with that Farman lawyer. Garth is all right."

As the day dragged by Farman was persistently at her to give him an exact rendition of this point or that, until she nearly showed her resentment. But not quite. Even when he said for the dozenth time, "But only you two in the room, and his dying without a word, surely you must admit it looks queer."

"I fail to see anything queer about it," she would say, each time. "Now, Mr. Farman, if you have any lingering suspicion that I killed my husband, voluntarily or by accident, I would prefer you to say so, rather than hint such an absurdity. Every one who knows us at all will tell you that my husband and I were on most affectionate terms, and that we looked forward joyously to a happy life together. An unknown heart trouble unexpectedly showed itself, and he died instantly, as many other seemingly healthy men have done. If you believe differently, tell us your proofs, your evidences, your reasons for such belief. You have no such reasons, and I cannot see why you are assuming this attitude."

When Garth arrived from Philadelphia he was sympathetic and kind in a really comforting way. He called for a conference at once, and gathered about him, the widow, her father and brother, and sent for Madame Malden, if she chose to appear. She did not, however, and deputized Perilla to take her place. Farman was, of course, present, and the family doctor, whose name was Spurgeon.

The talk was entirely informal, and Garth, as lawyer for Corey Malden, told the others how matters stood financially. The will would be read on Friday, after the funeral services, and as there were many small bequests to friends and to servants, he would not bore them with these minor matters. The chief point was that the large part of Corey Malden's enormous fortune was bequeathed to his wife, with a smaller but goodly amount to his mother, this to revert to the wife at the mother's death.

Garth, Antony Gaskell and Richard Carleton were executives and trustees for Perilla and Madame Malden. Perilla was glad she had met Dick Carleton in Washington, he was so kind and friendly. Tony, of course, she already knew, and Garth was a splendid man.

There was much more talk and red tape matters were discussed. When luncheon was announced the conference broke up, though there were some questions yet to be settled.

After lunch, Garth asked Perilla to go for a stroll with him through the gardens. He tried to express his deep sorrow for her in her grief, which for the moment must be stifled.

"You do understand," she said. "It is hard for me, I am so alone, even though my people are here. And I cannot tell friend from enemy. Madame Malden has 'made up' with me, as she calls it, but there's no telling when she will face the other way. Is she entirely all right, mentally?"

"Doctor Spurgeon is a fine physician and he says she is sound of brain, but her emotions are so warped and biased it is possible she may give way utterly at any time. I am so glad you and she are friendly, and I am glad, too, you will not live together, for you are right in assuming that she may at any time 'face the other way.' Now, don't let her get on your nerves, for after you are gone from here she will cease to think of you at all. That may not sound complimentary, but it is far better so. Now, tell me, very frankly, have you told the full and exact truth as to the circumstances of Corey's death?"

At anyone else Perilla would have felt angry at this flatfooted question.

"Yes, Mr. Garth, I have," she answered readily. "So far as I know there is no point or detail I have left unstated. I know it puts me in a questionable light, for it is true I was alone in the room with Corey. But the doctors have said that it was due to a heart weakness that nobody knew he had. As to my love for him, though you know me but slightly, you cannot doubt that, can you?"

"No, indeed. And remember, I heard much about you from Corey before I saw you on Sunday morning. Luckily you stopped that morning you fixed up the will."

Garth looked at her. How lovely she was, with her shining chestnut curls, and her sparkling eyes, veiled now by the realization of what she was going through.

Garth yearned to get her out of this place, this danger hole, where snakes of venomous type glided about. "You're leaving right after the funeral tomorrow?" he said.

"So immediately that I fear it will bother them. But I don't want to hear the will read again, and most of all I don't want to meet relatives and friends who will look at me curiously—or worse."

"That's right, get away as soon as you can. I'll stay a day or two, in order to overhaul that Farman person and get the low-down on the old lady. May I come to see you when I get back? Where will you be?"

"I'm going right to the New York house. Mother has moved up from the shore, and I'm glad of it. And, Mr. Garth, I want you to carry on just as if Corey were here. I mean as to my business matters. Will you be my attorney, or lawyer, or whatever the proper word is?"

The FARMERS CORNER

by RALPH H. TAYLOR
Executive Secretary Agricultural Council of California

Death rides the highways of rural California more recklessly and disastrously than the congested, traffic-tangled streets of California cities!

During last year, the motor vehicle death toll on country roads and highways shot far ahead of metropolitan traffic fatalities for the first time in the state's history.

And at the end of the year, rural areas, couning their dead, faced an alarming total of 1464 killed, in addition to thousands of maimed and injured. Deaths in accidents on city streets for the same period totaled 1341.

Such are the challenging findings of the state department of motor vehicles following a state-wide survey of traffic accidents to determine causes and fix responsibility for the state's appalling motor death toll.

Of vital importance to California's country districts is the conclusion reached by the state department that "During the last three years the brunt of the problem has been moving to the rural areas."

The greater percentage of motor vehicle accidents ,the study revealed, occurred in the cities, but only 5.1 per cent of the city collisions resulted in fatalities, while 15.9 per cent of the accidents outside of the metropolitan districts were death crashes.

And the explanation of the three-to-one higher death rate on the open road, according to the investigators, lies in the fact that rigid city speed limits act as a curb on recklessness, while open country is taken as an invitation to "hit it up." As conclusive evidence of the soundness of this analysis, the state survey disclosed that approximately 65 per cent of all motor vehicle fatalities occur in collisions at speeds in excess of 45 miles per hour.

"Seldom, if ever, is there a death in a traffic accident that involves a collision of a vehicle traveling 20 miles per hour or less," the report states. "Fatalities increase in something like geometric proportion uward with the speed of the vehicle at the time of the accident." Then, in recommendation, the report asserts: "Motor vehicle fatalities in California can be reduced from 10 to 25 per cent within a year ,as soon as excessive speed can be effectively checked."

In accidents involving two or more vehicles, the survey disclosed that 27.5 per cent of the crashes involved a collision between trucks and passenger cars; 2.7 per cent involved collisions between two trucks, or other freight vehicles, and 40.4 per cent passenger cars only.

"These data suggest that the collisions involving freight vehicles are more numerous than they should be," according to the findings of T. H. Dennis, state highway maintenance engineer, "for freight vehicles are approximately 15 per cent of all registered vehicles, yet they are directly involved in 30.2 per cent of the accidents studied.

"Clearly, an examination of these accidents is in order."

Throwing still further light on the state's highway accident problem, which claimed 2,805 dead and 45,153 injured last year, the survey brought forth that accidents involving drunken drivers or drunken pedestrians increased 20 per cent during the 12-month period.

Strict enforcement of reasonable speed limits; stiff penalties for rackless and drunken drivers; stricter enforcement of regulations regarding brakes and lights for both cars and commercial vehicles, and an intensive public educational program to promote safe driving are some of the suggestions made for meeting the problem.

California farm organizations—and California farmers, as individuals — certainly should lend wholehearted cooperation to the afety program, for farmers, together with other rural residents, are in the unfortunate position of occupying the front lines. A toll of 270,000 killed or injured in six years—California's "record" for the six years just ended— is a disgrace to the state and drastic action should be taken to stamp out the conditions which made it possible.

Calif. Counties

Placer County—created April 25, 1851. "Placer" probably is a contraction of the words "plaza de oro," the place of gold, and means in Spanish liberally translated, "a place near a river where gold is found." The county derived its name from the numerous places therein where the method of extracting gold from the ground, called placer mining, was practiced.

Placer is one of California's most historic counties and is the location of the second gold discovery of the state. Its mines have yielded nearly $100,000,000 and the county still ranks fairly high in mining. It is estimated a potential gold production of over one billion dollars remains in ancient river channels where mining can be carried on by the drifting process. In May, 1848, gold was discovered in Auburn ravine, at a point where the state highway now crosses the ravine and enters the city of Auburn. For six or eight years, mining was the principal industry and then settlers began planting fruit trees and barley.

No other county has such a wide range of resources, and diversity of climate and soil products. The United States Department of Agriculture has separated the soil groups in 18 series, 22 types and nine phases. Placer is a center for deciduous fruits of high quality. It is the largest shipper in California of ripe table fruits for eastern markets. The county has thousands of acres of virgin timber. Oranges, olives, plums, peaches, pears, cherries and figs are raised abundantly in the foothills while the flat country has immense fields of wheat, oats, barley and alfalfa. Hunting, fishing and scenic attractions lure thousands of visitors. Population: 24,468. Area, 1411 square miles.

Pinto, Savoldi Feature Local Wrestling Bill

"Jumping Joe" Savoldi, former world's heavy weight wrestling champion, who gave San Jose fans an exhibition of his old-time form here last week, will be seen in action again Saturday night at Forman's arena, when he wrestles the main event against Stanley Pinto.

Savoldi for the first time in his many appearances in San Jose, made a big hit with local mat followers for he really wrestled and proved that he can do just that as well as supply plenty of color with drop-kicks and flying tackles.

Pinto did an "iron man" act last week when he wrestled his opponent and won and then came back to wrestle another, when one man failed to appear, and won that bout. Pinto has always been a big favorite with local fans and has only been defeated once in San Jose. He is a great wrestler with several thousand matches behind him.

The match is expected to draw another crowd to the arena, especially due to the strong supporting card being arranged. Gino Garibaldi, who wrestled Savoldi here last week in the finest matches presented in months, will work the semi-windup against an opponent yet to be selected. Two fast preliminaries will also be listed and there will be no advance in prices.

BEDTIME STORY

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

THE HUNTER LOSES HIS TEMPER

THE hunter, hidden near the pond of Paddy the Beaver, chuckled silently. That is to say, he laughed without making any sound. He had watched Mr. and Mrs. Quack feeding along the edge of the pond down toward Paddy's dam, behind the end of which Reddy Fox had been hidden. Reddy had been waiting for those Ducks just as the hunter himself was waiting for Lightfoot the Deer. Then along came Sammy Jay and spied Reddy

Mr. and Mrs. Quack Called Their Thanks to Sammy.

Fox. At once he had begun to scream at the top of his lungs, "Thief! Thief! Thief!" Mr. and Mrs. Quack had understood him perfectly. They swam out to the middle of the pond while Reddy Fox, knowing that it was useless to stay longer with Sammy Jay about, had snarled angrily and then taken himself off through the Green Forest.

The hunter thought it a great joke on Reddy. To tell the truth, he was very much pleased. He wanted those Ducks himself. He suspected that they would stay in that pond for some days, and he planned to return there and shoot them after he had got Lightfoot the Deer. He wanted to get Lightfoot first, and he knew that to shoot at anything else might spoil his chance of getting a shot at Lightfoot.

"Sammy Jay did me a good turn," thought the hunter, "although he doesn't know it. Reddy Fox certainly would have caught one of those Ducks had Sammy not come along just when he did. It would have been a shame to have one of them caught by that fox. I mean to get one and, I hope, both of them myself."

Now when you come to think of it, it would have been a far greater shame for the hunter to have killed Mr. and Mrs. Quack than for Reddy Fox to have done so. Reddy was hunting them because he was hungry. The hunter would have shot them for sport. He didn't need them. He had plenty of other food. Reddy Fox never kills just for the pleasure of killing.

So the hunter continued to sit in his hiding place with very friendly feelings for Sammy Jay. Sammy watched Reddy Fox disappear and then flew over to that side of the pond where the hunter was. Mr. and Mrs. Quack called their thanks to Sammy, to which he replied that he had done no more for them than he would do for anybody, or than they would have done for him.

For some time Sammy sat quietly in the top of the tree, but all the time his sharp eyes were very busy. By and by, he spied the hunter sitting on the log. At first he couldn't make out just what it was he was looking at. It didn't move, nevertheless Sammy was suspicious. Presently, he flew over to a tree where he could see better. Right away he spied the terrible gun and he knew just what it was.

Once more he began to yell, "Thief! Thief! Thief!" at the top of his lungs. It was then that the hunter lost his temper. He knew that, now he had been discovered by Sammy Jay, it was useless to remain there. He was angry clear through. He no longer had a friendly feeling for Sammy Jay.

Father of Cathedral Music

Thomas Tallis, born before 1515, was called the father of English cathedral music. He is known to have become organist at Waltham Abbey, where, on the dissolution of the monastery in 1540, he received in compensation for the loss of his preferment 20 shillings for wages and 20 shillings for reward. In the library of the British museum is preserved a volume of treatises on music, on the last page of which appears his autograph—the only specimen known.

THE FORSAKEN

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

"LET me take the grain, Mother,
you sit by the fire;
I will feed the chickens, and I will milk the cow.
I want to get so tired, Mother, and yet I never tire;
And nights I am so sleepy, yet cannot sleep somehow."

"I will do the chores, Daughter;
you go walk awhile;
Trip across the meadows as you
used to do;
Surely there are roses there to make you smile,
That will bring the roses back again to you."

"No, not there, not there, Mother!—
here I must abide;
Wilted are the roses, leaving but the stone.
Fields that you have walked, Mother,
some one at your side,
Now you cannot walk, Mother,
walk again alone."

"Yonder in the town, Daughter, on the village green,
Men and maids are dancing, men
and maids are gay;
Hurry to the village—you are yet
the queen;
Take your share of pleasure, pleasure while you may."

"No, I cannot go, Mother, there I cannot go,
For they all remember when we both were there.
They would give me pity, pity me,
I know—
That's the hardest burden sorrow has to bear."

"Listen, foolish daughter; him you must forget—
Better lost the lover that a maid can lose;
Hope is all before us, all behind regret—
Life is joy or sorrow always as we choose."

"Life is joy or sorrow? Mother
dear, my joy,
After all was sorrow, though I didn't know.
Now, to give me pleasure, sorrow
I employ—
I can't keep from laughing—it's so funny—so—"

"Quick! Some wine! The doctor!
Now she sleeps at last.
Is she only sleeping? Will she ever wake?
Has he even killed her? Well, the past is past.
He shall be forgiven, for her great love's sake."

Through A WOMAN'S EYES

by JEAN NEWTON

WE LIVE DAY BY DAY

"A SHORT life and a merry one," says the prodigal. So he spends not only his money, without thought of provision for the rainy day, but also his energy, his health and his strength. He does usually manage to have what he calls a merry life and also a short one.

And all that can be hoped for the people whose hopes and expectation of happiness go no further than "a short life and a merry one" is that their way of living may not shorten other lives than their own, that their pursuit of pleasure may not drag into its maelstrom the lives of others who are bound to them by love, though their own ideas of happiness and of the meaning of life are very different.

So much for the prodigals, the wasters. Their mistake is in thinking only of today, never of tomorrow. And no one will again say that it is a mistake.

Strange, then, is it not, that there should be people of the opposite turn of mind, those who think only of the future and not at all of today, who are just as far off the track that leads to satisfaction and happiness.

I am thinking of the people who are so preoccupied with their aims for the future that they forget that life is lived day by day. The man whose efforts to amass wealth leave him no time or thought to make friends with his family, is, of course, a familiar example. But there are others. There is the mother so occupied with thoughts of her children's future, of what she wants them to become, that she misses the pleasures of living with them through their childhood stages. There are children who allow their ambition, their work and study which in future is to bring their parents joy, to absorb them so that they become as strangers to those parents.

Mother's Cook Book

ARTISTRY IN COOKERY

THE cook who really enjoys mixing ingredients as a painter does his colors will find no limit to the delightful dishes which one may originate or enlarge upon with the materials at hand. One must follow a few fundamental principles in cookery, and after that let the imagination soar, for there is no end to inspiration.

After some experience with handling foods, most toothsome dishes may be prepared from bits of leftovers. The cook who wastes nothing, but serves her food in a dainty, appetizing manner, is a real genius and her talents are ever in demand.

It is not always wise to tell all one knows as to the contents of a dish, for some conscientious objectors will refuse to try a made-over dish, or rearranged food.

Now, who will dare to call a steamed pudding a leftover? Yet one may prepare a most tasty one with a few squares of corn bread, a cupful of leftover cocoa, a bit of oatmeal, a few raisins and a couple of egg yolks left from some icing or dessert.

POULTRY FACTS

WATER IMPORTANT TO PRODUCE EGGS

Tests Reveal Laying Birds Must Drink Often.

By H. H. Alp, Poultry Extension Specialist, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

It takes water as well as feed to produce eggs. This means that since hens have very little water storage capacity, water must be supplied at all time if the flock owner expects to take advantage of the higher egg prices now in prospect.

Approximately nine pounds of water are required for each dozen eggs laid, according to records of daily water intake of 60 White Leghorn pullets over a period of four weeks.

Another significant fact brought out by the trials was that egg production increased almost in direct proportion to increased consumption of water. During the first week the hens drank approximately 2.16 pounds of water each. Egg production during the same week averaged 2.99 to the hen.

During the last wek of the trials water consumption averaged 3.08 pounds, or about 138 per cent of the first week's average. Egg production during the last week averaged 4.19 eggs, or approximately 140 per cent of the first week's production. These figures indicate that where the ration is adequate, plenty of drinking water will help boost the laying efficiency of hens.

The water furnished should always be clean. Where possible it is advisable to replenish the supply often so as to keep the water in the containers fresh. Fountains of fairly large capacity are the most satisfactory, especially if they are of the type that prevents the birds from contaminating the water.

Gather Eggs Often, Says College Poultry Expert

Frequent gathering of eggs is one important way of preserving egg quality, says D. C. Henderson, poultry extension specialist of the Pennsylvania State college. To prevent broken eggs and dirty eggs and to prevent the first egg laid in a nest from being warmed by the body heat by other hens using the same nest, it is advisable to gather the eggs frequently during the day.

In a recent survey on this subject it was found that 64 per cent gathered their eggs twice daily, 25 per cent gathered three times daily, 7 per cent four times a day, 2 per cent once a day and 1 per cent five times a day. Where poultry was kept as part of a general farm business the eggs were gathered ordinarily twice daily, usually at noon and again at night. Those who gathered their eggs more frequently were generally the producers who specialized in the poultry business.

Select Cockerels Now

Breeding cockerels should be selected early for best results, according to poultry husbandry specialists at Iowa State college. The more vigorous and better developed birds should be saved, and the slower developing cockerels should be marketed immediately to avoid overcrowding during the colder weather. Before the cockerels are selected, the weaknesses in the pullet flock should be considered. Males especially strong in those characteristics then should be saved. Males also approaching the true type of the breed are most desirable. The head should be clean-cut, with bright understanding.

House Pullets Early

Fall and winter egg production may be improved by housing the pullets early. Thoroughly clean the laying house and cover the floor with straw or some other suitable litter, however, before moving the birds from the brooder house or range shelter. Numerous poultry diseases may be carried over if the laying house is not cleaned and disinfected. The house should be dry when the pullets are moved into it. Separate houses and ranges for old hens and pullets will also help to prevent the spread of disease and parasites from old birds to the young flock of pullets.—Wallaces' Farmer.

Foul Air Checks Laying

One of the reasons many pullets fail to lay well during the winter, in spite of good feeding, is the damp and stagnant air to be found in many poultry houses Many poultry keepers close up nearly all ventilators when winter approaches, under the impression that the fowls need the warmth. Fresh air is far more important than warmth, and many batches of pullets that fail to come into production at the proper age are suffering from this mistaken idea. Birds so affected may not suffer from disease, though they are very liable to colds.

Duty Is That Which Is Done for Good of Others

What is duty? With regard to ourselves it is to be independent of the senses, and with regard to others, it is to be untiring in giving help and support; help to live well, to will well, to wish well; help by agreement and by opposition, by giving and by withholding, by firmness and by compliance, by praise and by blame, by silence and by words, by what is pleasant and by what is painful.

Dwellers on the same earth, travelers of the same hour, and companions along the same road, we ought to help one another; and when we reach the resting place, we shall have first to render an account of what each has done for the happiness of the rest—for joy, or for goodness. A kind look will win its reward.

Paging Japan
Black Gold Best for War
The Mighty Airplane
Two Kinds of Treasure

When the Japanese plan to absorb a section of northern China with population of 95,000,000 seemed to have been abandoned, chaos broke loose in northern China. Industrious bandits, without fear of Japan's efficiency, began looting stores and Chinese merchants begged Japan to restore order. Eleven Japanese divisions quartered outside the Great Wall are ready to move in, and Japan will hardly have the heart to stay out under such circumstances. Later Japan will not have the heart to stay out of the Philippines. Japanese confidence in the sun goddess seems justified. The drift is Japan's way, with westerners busy planning to kill each other.

Arthur Brisbane

There are, California tells you, several kinds of gold: yellow gold that took crowds to California in 1849; another yellow gold that grows on orange, lemon and grapefruit trees; the white gold water power rolling from the mountains, to produce black gold, power and fertility, and the oil in the ground.

Mussolini's determination to keep oil flowing into Italy, even at a risk of European war, shows that oil is more important in war now than yellow gold. It moves great tanks, keeps the planes in the air; it means motion, and successful motion means victory.

Mighty is the airplane in northern Brazil, where the "elbow" sticks out into the Atlantic. Soldiers said by the Associated Press to be guided by Communists decided to run the government and make it better. They locked up their officers and were just starting the new "better" government when official airplanes came along with bombs.

"Bang" went one or two bombs, aerial machine guns said "rat-tat-tat" a few times.

The revolutionary soldiers said, "That will do," and scattered in the interior. It is hard to "rise and throw off your chains" while capitalism is dropping bombs.

In Jacksonville, Fla., gentlemen fitting out an expedition to hunt for pirate treasure think they know where the gold is. They may find it; probably will not.

Other gentlemen are figuring out similar treasure expeditions in Wall street, regardless of what happened when they did that in 1929.

Men hunting pirate treasure and Wall street treasure will have plenty of excitement, and that probably is well worth the effort. "A dull life is no life."

The great Jonker diamond, biggest uncut stone on earth, is to be cut into smaller pieces, since no one rich enough to buy it now would wear so big a diamond.

It might have been sold to a Russian czar, Turkish sultan or Ethiopian emperor for use in a crown, "to increase majesty." But czars and sultans have vanished, Ethiopia's ruler is short of cash.

The big diamond will be cut into small pieces and sell for about $1,500,000. The largest "piece" will weigh 100 carats, the rest from 10 to 50 carats. Interesting opportunity for deserving Hollywood stars.

John S. Ciemiengo, sixteen, sentenced to die next January in the electric chair, helped George H. Hildebrand, twenty-six, to rob and murder an old poultry farmer.

Sixteen seems rather young for an electric chair candidate, but the judge and jury felt that by disposing of the young murderer now they would avoid robberies and murders in the future. Recent history of youthful criminals makes that probable.

"Foreign observers" in Ethiopia believe that Ethiopia is fighting a lost cause; also that, as the number of wounded increases and the case looks more and more hopeless, there might be a general massacre of whites. If this should happen the "50 to 1" gentlemen of the League of Nations would have themselves to blame.

The "sanctions" and boycott will not prevent Italy defeating Ethiopia, but they do make the Ethiopian ruler over-confident, persuading him to sacrifice lives unnecessarily.

Bishops of England's Anglican church, the archbishop of Canterbury, leading, denounce Chancellor Hitler's persecution of German Jews, as they well may, and they hope that Christians in Great Britain and elsewhere will "exert their influence."

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—Through some months past, Cordell Hull, secretary of state, has been proceeding cautiously and quietly in the negotiation of trade agreements with foreign nations. His work has attracted comparatively little public attention although throughout the negotiations individual economic interests who stood to gain or lose depending upon their lines of business have made known their feelings quite emphatically. Six of these trade agreements, now called trade treaties, had been consummated in this manner. When the seventh agreement came along, however, the story was different. That was the treaty with our northern neighbor, Canada.

Canadian Trade Pact

It is impossible here to set forth the list of commercial products encompassed in the new trade agreement with Canada. I doubt if most of the people of this country ever will know details of that treaty. By the nature of things, few persons can be interested in all of the items. But, I do not believe that it is the question of individual interest in the entire list that ought to concern us. Aside from the policy involved in the negotiation and agreement on tariff concessions, the importance of the Canadian treaty to the average individual lies in the one or two, or half a dozen at most, items that affect each one personally.

I do not mean to say that the policy involved is unimportant. The contrary is decidedly true. From a political standpoint, of course, it is general policy that will be debated; from an individual standpoint it will be the direct effect that execution of that policy has on each of us that will determine our ultimate views and to that extent determine whether we will be for or against the general policy of reducing tariffs enacted against certain kinds of imports.

* * *

The new agreement with Canada takes effect January 1—provided the Canadian parliament ratifies it. No such ratification is necessary in this country. The treaty was negotiated by Mr. Hull and President Roosevelt under the authority granted by congress in legislation passed a year ago which gave to the President the privilege of working out trade treaties without further congressional sanction. That law restricted the President in only one way, namely, the requirement that an increase or reduction of tariff rates included in those trade treaties may not exceed 50 per cent of the rate fixed in the present tariff laws. So it is seen that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hull had virtually complete authority. It will operate for three years and, as far as I have been able to discover, it will be effective after Canadian ratification and there will be nothing anybody can do about it, be it good or bad.

Had Free Hand

In making public the agreement negotiated by Mr. Hull with Prime Minister MacKenzie King, the President asserted his belief that the agreement will initiate or revive a flow of commerce back and forth across our northern frontier in a manner that will be most helpful. He considered that the agreement would mean additional markets for some of our products and therefore additional work for some of our unemployed. The Canadian prime minister was of the opinion that in this agreement a long step had been taken toward healing a breach that has existed between the two countries for 69 years. He was hopeful, like President Roosevelt, that the channel of trade again will be filled, perhaps not to the levels of the boom days of 1928 and 1929, but would against carry satisfactory volume.

It will be recalled that our shipments to Canada in 1930 amounted to about $900,000,000. The depression cut those shipments to approximately $300,000,000 last year. So, if the predictions of the President and Mr. MacKenzie King are in any way fulfilled, a considerable traffic is due to begin upon the operation of this new treaty.

Any discussion of the treaty, however, that failed to call attention to basic conditions, in my opinion, would be short of its goal.

* * *

Political Standpoint

Now from the political standpoint, examination of the treaty must take into consideration individual items. And how those individual items affect communities and economic interests in this country. Already, we here in Washington have been deluged with the complaints of certain communities against provisions of the treaty. Likewise, we have heard those provisions praised from other sections. Thus, from the political standpoint we see developing a fine old fight over the tariff.

Tariff questions are and always have been sectional questions. Industrial communities want to be protected against inroads of foreign competition where labor is cheaper. Agriculture wants to be protected against imports from bountiful producing lands in those countries where vast open spaces and high productivity exist at the minimum of cost. Importers and consumers of imported products always have fought and always will fight to have low tariff rates so that the things they buy may enter this country at the lowest possible price. With reference to the Canadian treaty, these same conditions exist.

Early outbursts indicate that cattle raising communities and dairy producing sections are up in arms because the treaty reduced a tariff protection accorded against imports of cattle and cattle products and the products of the dairy.

Lumber interests are upset. It is true that the lumber market in the United States has been in the doldrums for several years and naturally the lumber people do not want to have Canadian shipments absorb what little market they have.

These are just a few of the complaints. They are offset partially at least by the praise and the hopes of some other phases of agriculture such as fruit and vegetable growers who feel that they can now market their products in Canada. Without even a careful analysis of the more than seven hundred items involved in the treaty, it is to be seen that there will be possible markets available after January 1 to a number of agricultural interests. Yet it remains, as I said earlier, for the passage of time to disclose exactly whether the net result will be favorable to us commercially or whether the Canadians have put over a fine bargain from their standpoint.

Political Dynamite

All of the discussion about the Canadian treaty, however, brings back memory. As a result of these recollections, I dug back the other day into the congressional debates of 1911 when a Canadian reciprocity agreement was under consideration, backed by the late William Howard Taft. After reading those debates, particularly the observations of the late and distinguished Champ Clark of Missouri and Representative George Norris, now a senator from Nebraska, I could not fail to realize the political dynamite embodied in the new course of international trade relations adopted by President Roosevelt. It was the Canadian reciprocity proposal that defeated Mr. Taft for re-election to the Presidency.

I am not predicting here that the same consequences are in store for President Roosevelt but it is fair to recall, it seems to me, that the reciprocity proposal of 1911 burned the fingers of every political leader who touched it. The cases are not exactly comparable nor analogous. Mr. Roosevelt has retained a number of tariff duties which were swept aside in the proposed Taft reciprocity arrangement. He is therefore fortified to that extent. But you may be sure that those who sponsor the present Canadian agreement are going to meet the same sort of fight that was made against the Taft proposal.

Then there is in the current treaty circumstance another factor to be considered. It links back to the Champ Clark observations which were made on February 14, 1911. At that time, Mr. Clark was expressing the view that the reciprocity agreement constituted a step at least in the direction of universal peace. In the debate just mentioned, Mr. Norris asked Mr. Clark to elaborate on his view concerning the value of the agreement as an instrument of peace.

"I wanted to ask the gentleman a question along the line of universal peace," said Mr. Norris. "As I understand it, the gentleman favors the bill for at least one reason—that it will have a tendency to bring Canada into the Union."

"Yes," Mr. Clark replied. "I have no doubt about that. I do not have any doubt whatever that day is not far distant when Great Britain will joyfully see all of her North American possessions become a part of this republic. That is the way things are now tending."

So, if the controversy over the present Canadian tariff agreement becomes violent, I think it is fair to expect that again we will hear the question discussed whether the United States is seeking to annex Canada—to make Canada part and parcel of the United States. Of course, as far as anyone can see today, annexation of Canada is inconceivable, but the incident is related here simply to show how far-reaching such controversy may become.

It's a Sweet World as Far as Desserts Go; Variety in Sugar

Honey Was First Sweetening; Maple Sugar and Corn Sirup Add Bit.

Although we do not usually consider sugar with the flavorings, if we were for any reason deprived of our customary amount of sugar we would soon realize that its special value is from the flavor angle. Actually starchy foods can replace sugar in food value, but they are so bland that they are not substitutes at all for the sugar flavor.

When we use the word sugar in terms of foodstuffs we usually mean granulated sugar made from the juice of the cane or from beets. Other forms of sweetening from cane sugar are brown sugar and molasses, which have a much more distinctive flavor than granulated sugar, although a little less sweetness. We use them particularly on account of flavor. Sometimes granulated sugar is caramelized to give it more flavor. Caramel is very easily prepared by stirring sugar in a heavy frying pan over a low fire until it melts. If we are using it at once it can be added to the dish it is to flavor in this form. If it is to be kept we will add a little water and stir over the fire until we have a smooth thin sirup.

Maple sirup and sugar have a delicate, delicious flavor. We will hope the winter will not be too open to give a good season, which starts at the first thaw after a cold winter. There is an increasingly large production of maple sirup and sugar for flavoring purposes. It is, however, a mere nothing compared to the enormous sugar production as a whole.

Another form of sweetening as flavoring which is used to some extent is a modern development. This is corn sirup made from cornstarch. It is not quite as sweet as sugar. It comes in several flavors. It is used as sirup for griddle cakes and waffles, with sugar for candies and to some extent, desserts. It is a real asset in candy making, as it makes a mixture of a creamy texture which is difficult to achieve when using sugar alone. If too much is used the candy will not harden.

Honey is another form of sugar. This is probably the first sweetening known to man. The honey industry has been greatly developed in the last four years. Strained honey is packed in jars and is sold as a "spread" and for sweetening and flavoring other foods by itself or combined with sugar. "Wild honey," which we see mentioned among the foods of primitive man, is quite different from the honey of today, with its different characteristic flavor, which depends upon the flower from which the bees draw it.

4 tbsp. sugar

Mix and sift the dry ingredients and rub in the fat. Make a hole in the flour at the side of the bowl and add a half cup of liquid. Stir in enough flour to make a ball of soft dough. Remove this from the bowl and add to the remaining flour enough liquid to make a soft dough. Divide the dough in half and roll each half the same size and shape. Place one layer on a greased pan, butter slightly, and place the other layer on top of the first. Bake 15 to 20 minutes in a hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit). Split and cover with shaved maple sugar and chopped nuts. Place the other layer on top and cover with sweetened whipped cream. Garnish with shaved maple sugar and whole nuts.

Out of Our Weakness Comes Lasting Strength

Is is true of a human life that it finds its highest enjoyment in the consciousness of progress. Our times of greatest pleasure are when we have won some higher peak of difficulty, trodden under foot some evil, refused some pleasant temptation for truth's sake, been swept out of ourselves by love, and felt day by day in such high labors so sure a growth of moral strength within us, that we cannot conceive of an end of growth.—Stopford Brooke.

That there is humor in drama as well as drama in humor is proven in the latest Key Francis starring vehicle, "The Goose and the Gander," a Warner Bros. picture which is booked for Sunday and Monday, Dec. 8 and 9. It is a story of stolen hearts and stolen jewels, with characters indulging in a merry marital mix-up as thrilling as it is funny. In addition to "The Goose and the Gander" we are showing "Harmony Lane," based on the life of Stephen Collins Foster, the genius who wrote America's most beloved melodies. His part is played in the picture by Douglas Montgomery and a fine supporting cast, including Evelyn Venable, Adrienne Ames, Joseph Cawthorn, William Frawley, Lloyd Hughes, Cora Sue Collins, Gilbert Emery, James Bush, and a cast of thousands.

Under the capable management of Mr. Conway you will always find that "homelike" atmosphere, and he is to be congratulated for giving this city a hotel of this kind.

He realizes the importance of service and the cleanliness of the rooms. He is a public-spirited citizen, always anxious to promote any project that is for the betterment of this community.

The tap room has just been remodeled—everything has been done over at tremendous expense. Thousands of dollars have been spent on the lighting fixtures and lighting effects alone. It is without a doubt the most sumptious cocktail lounge in the entire county. Music and dancing every night.

GUARD YOUR CHILD DURING THE DANGEROUS "INDOOR DAYS"

Winter keeps children cooped up indoors much of the time. What sunshine they get is weak in rays that produce vitamin D, the builder of bones. Is there any wonder that so many youngsters have poor teeth and rickety bones?

Bridge the gap of these sun-shy months with McKESSON'S HIGH POTENCY COD LIVER OIL. It furnishes 2½ times the usual potency of vitamins A and D. Vitamin A guards against infection. Vitamin D gives "sunshine" values.

Highest grade Norwegian oil. Extra refinement makes smaller doses effective. You can also obtain McKESSON'S COD LIVER OIL (Standardized). Either plain or Mint Flavored. Specify McKESSON'S when you buy. Sold at all good drug stores.
